

The Britannica Answered and the South Vindicated: A Defense of the South Against the Aspersions of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and a Criticism of That Work (Classic Reprint)

Cyclopedia for Americans, and especially for Southern people. I will begin, then, the purposed refutation and exposure of the Britannica, with the following simple statement of historic facts: The first President of the United States, and the most illustrious American the man first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen, under whose leadership the colonies won their independence, and on whom, by common acclaim, is bestowed the title, the father of his country, was a Southern man. The first President of the Continental Congress was a Southern nian, and a Southern member of that Congress was the author and mover of the adoption of the resolution declaring the Colonies free and independent States. The greatest American orator the man whose words most inspired the American heart and nerved the American arm in the struggle for independence was a Southern man. The author of the Declaration of Independence the most famous production of an American pen- was a Southern man, and when the peoples of the United States met to celebrate the Centennial of that Declaration it was a Southern man who was selected to write the poem for the opening of that Centennial. The father of the Constitution was a Southern man; its greatest expounder the greatest American jurist was a Southern man; and when, in the fullness of time, the peoples of the Union came to celebrate the Centennial of that immortal instrument, it was a Southern man who was the chosen orator of that memorable and imposing occasion, For more than half the period of its existence the Government formed by that Constitution has been administered by Presidents who were Southern men, and the years of their administrations mark immeasurably the most splendid and prosperous eras of the Union. It was the statesmanship of a Southern President, seconded by the ability of a Southern

We've started our countdown to National Handbag Day on October 10, and that means we'll have special features for you every day, right up to the big event! Today, we're here to talk about the intersection of celebrity and accessories, and more specifically, how the two can become intertwined in public consciousness for years. The kinds of stars who carry a particular bag do a lot to shape the market's perception of it and the designer who created it, which is why so many brands give out free bags to stars now: they're hoping to create positive associations. In the cases you see below, though, things came along a little bit more naturally. You can't rush love, after all. Think of a bag-celeb duo we missed? Let us know in the comments!
