

Should Corporations Practice Medicine?: Confronts the Most Controversial Patient and Physician Issues of the Century: A Wake up call to the Public and the Health Care Professional

Corporate management of the sick and disabled has finally reached a critical point. Although most Americans are finally recognizing how oppressive a profit-oriented socialized health care system can be, we foolishly continue to pay for some twenty federally supported health care programs while too many can no longer afford their own care. Surprisingly, that same type of commercialization and lack of standards confronted our country at the end of the nineteenth century. The 1910 Flexner Report warned us about advertising, competition, and money incentives, saying: ...promotion of medicine as a business, rather than an ethical profession, resulted in the general interest of the public being lost. Should Corporations Practice Medicine? suggests a more humanistic practice of medicine that's performed by professionally licensed specialists; but only if organized medicine can or will assume the professional leadership required.

We've started our countdown to National Handbag Day on October 10, and that means we'll have special features for you every day, right up to the big event! Today, we're here to talk about the intersection of celebrity and accessories, and more specifically, how the two can become intertwined in public consciousness for years. The kinds of stars who carry a particular bag do a lot to shape the market's perception of it and the designer who created it, which is why so many brands give out free bags to stars now: they're hoping to create positive associations. In the cases you see below, though, things came along a little bit more naturally. You can't rush love, after all. Think of a bag-celeb duo we missed? Let us know in the comments!
